

Writing for URNA

Guiding Template for Your Research Story Submission

Please address and fill in each section, if applicable.

Title:

Provide a short catchy title for your story. It may be descriptive of your submission (e.g. signposting if the article is about a research problem or a research methodology), provocative (e.g. posed as a question), creative (e.g. using word-play), etc.

Your full name and affiliation:

Please provide your name the way you want it to appear in the newsletter, and your institutional affiliation. E.g. Dr Lilia Mantai, The University of Sydney

Your email (optional):

In case URNA readers want to get in touch with you.

Opening paragraph:

Provide 1-2 sentences that summarise your story and/or will capture the reader's attention. This will appear in bold as the opening paragraph of your story.

Your research story:

This is the main part of your submission. Provide up to max. 500 words on your research, describing what you do, how, and/or why this is important. You may focus on the topic or the research process. URNA readers are particularly interested in your personal reflections about research in general, and/or your particular research area, so please make sure to include reflection on research or research process. Remember this is not an academic article and a more conversational tone is appropriate and welcome.

Optional but strongly recommended:

Provide a photo either of you or something that relates to your research or article in jpeg, gif, or png.

Please familiarise yourself with the URNA policy when you write for us:

<https://www.acur.org.au/wp-content/uploads/2021/10/URNA-policy-2021.pdf>